

Neat Group certifies its commitment to the environment

Madrid, September 9, 2013.- The manufacturing division of Neat Group, in its commitment to sustainability and balance of the planet, has obtained the certificate of the UNE EN ISO14001: 2004; it is a standard used as a reference for the development of an Environmental Management System.

This standard, accepted and recognized worldwide, specifies the requirements for an environmental management system designed to enable an organization to develop and implement a policy and objectives which take into account legal requirements and other requirements to which the organization subscribes, and information concerning significant environmental aspects.

The success in obtaining this certificate responds to satisfactory compliance by Neat Group, of all requirements audited by the competent authorities, from establishing, documenting, implementing, maintaining and constantly improving an environmental management according to the requirements of this international standard to determine how it will fulfill these requirements, defining and documenting the scope of its environmental management system.

Although Neat Group is not a company generating high amounts of waste, anyway it has implemented in its daily processes an environmental management system which includes reducing waste like cardboard and plastic, optimization of resources, such as stationery, water, electricity, heating and air conditioning.

Similarly, the company promotes among its staff a philosophy of protecting and defending the environment.

For Neat Group, a philosophy of sustainability is a prerequisite for achieving business value to meet the rest of their growth targets.
